Today’s readings invite us to trust fully in the Lord and to examine those times in which we trust more in ourselves than in the power of the Holy Spirit at work in our lives. Saint Paul defends his apostolic ministry in his letter to the Corinthians despite having persecuted the Church and being rejected by those who did not accept or understand him. He always trusted the risen Christ who called him one day to send him forth to preach a new message. Jesus himself, in the Gospel, asks the apostles to cast their nets and fish even though, according to Peter and his companions, there weren’t many fish. This is a moment of trust and becomes an experience of sorrow and a search for forgiveness. Jesus does not reprimand Peter for his lack of faith; instead he invites him to understand that his new mission is “catching men.” How many times have we trusted more in ourselves than in the Lord? When we recognize these times, Jesus invites us to discover new sources of evangelization and not to feel frustrated in our ministerial work. Let us remember that we are called to fish, even when there are not many to catch, because the true fisherman will encourage us.
